WOLLON DOUBLE HOUSE
Havre de Grace, Md.

c. 1840

The Wollon Double House is a four bay, two and a half story, brick Federal townhouse on a fully raised, lighted basement. This is a good example of a brick double house built in the vernacular Federal style. It is a very simple townhouse where two double, interior end chimneys, linked at the base and accentuated by a five course brick band extending from chimney to eaves are an unusual feature of the house. The plan differs from others in Havre de Grace built c. 1840; instead of having a sidehall plan, it has two rooms opening into each other with a small hall between them.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Wollon Double House is a four-bay, 2½ story, brick Federal townhouse on a fully raised, lighted basement. On the south elevation, a low, random rubble foundation is visible. From the outside, the two houses, having few variations between them, are treated as one unit. The houses, built of brick, laid in common bond, are painted dark red with white trim. S-shaped tie rod ends are present in the south wall.

Located in the middle of the block with houses on either side of it, the structure is directly abutted by a 2½ story frame house on the north elevation and the side yard of the house next to it.

A two-bay porch with a hip roof shelters the entrance doors in the center bays of the facade (east elevation). The present porch has curved brackets in the corners of the bays. The porch is reached from the street by one granite and four wooden steps. The southern house has an enclosed wooden porch on the rear.

Window openings, arranged uniformly on the facade, contain 6/6 double-hung sash with masonry sills painted white and brick flat arches. Although there are no shutters on the house, the iron fasteners for them remain in the wall. Each house has a dormer with a triangular pediment and 6/6 light double-hung sash window. There are no windows on the flanks of the building. The rear elevation has four windows, similar to those on the facade; rear elevation dormers are covered with asphalt shingles.

The entrance doors are six-paneled with three light transoms, having stone sills and brick flat arches above them. On the front beneath the porch, doors open into the basement.

The south house has a slate roof while the roof of the north house is asphalt. The ridge of the gable roof runs northsouth. There are large, double, interior end chimneys linked at the base found at each end of the roof. A four course brick cornice extends across the building. The ends of the roof and house are accentuated by five courses of brick extending from the chimneys to the eaves where they project about eight inches from the facade.

Interior: The following interior information pertains to the north side of the house. This house has two rooms on the first floor with a narrow hallway between them containing enclosed stairs to the second floor. In the front room, the chimney breast has a plain mantle with a large rectangular opening, presently covered. The top of the door enframements in the front room are triangular in shape.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Architecturally, the Wollon Double House is a good example of a brick double house built in a vanacular Federal style. It is a very simple townhouse where two double, interior end chimneys, linked at the base and accentuated by a five course brick band extending from chimney to eaves are an unusual feature of the house. The plan of the house differs from others in Havre de Grace built c. 1840. Instead of having a sidehall plan, it has two rooms opening into each other with a small hall between them. Also the others are detached dwellings, unlike this one, which is a double house.

The Wollon Double House is important to community planning for several reasons. First, it is constructed of brick in an area of predominantly frame houses. Secondly, it is part of a category of early-to-mid-19th century brick townhouses with English basements. Also the house forms a particular and close relationship to the Kitzmiller Apartments, 667 Otsego Street (HA-1096) and the Barnes-Hopper House, 701 N. Adams Street (HA-832). These three fine houses provide an architectural focal point in an area of town which is deteriorating rapidly despite some notable private restoration efforts.
